

Virginia Board of Education adopt regulations that will require school faculty to identify books containing sensitive or controversial content and to publish a syllabus prior to the commencement of classes that notifies parents about any sensitive or sexually explicit materials that may be included in the course, the textbook, or any supplemental instructional materials. These initiatives substantially interfere with instructors' academic freedom and pose a real risk of chilling teachers' and librarians' acquisition and use of complex and challenging literature.

